So Mr. Divisor, finding her by another sought, wished Mrs. Lembkin for himself. That evening, after having been as nervous all day as a boy can be with a dime in his pocket, and no opportunity to spend it, he proposed and was well rewarded for the courageous act. He was accepted. But, under the circumstances, this was not enough. He wished to marry at once, but could assign no reason. The astonished lady at last consented and the next day it was announced that at a certain San Francisco church, at a given hour and a given day they would be married; and so came it to pass. As the happy pair were departing from the church a decrepit man with tears in his eyes stopped them, --as Mr. Divisor imagined, with the purpose to bless them....
