Excerpt: . . . she worked a great deal, but that all the other little girls were crazy to have flower-beds And when some of the children began to be interested in the specimens their sisters brought home, and wanted to go on the rambles and searches, young Grandmother Bradlee said, Lets form them into a club by themselves, and have them grow up interested in plants and outdoor life. So a club of five was started. The youngest member was a week over four years old, and the oldest--Miss Patty, the ministers daughter--was a month over six years old. She was made the president of the baby club. . Miss Patty was always called Miss Patty. She was really quite dignified and sensible. She and her papa lived alone in the parsonage. Of course there were servants; but it was Miss Patty who presided at table, even...
